

Obliviousness

Some workers are simply unaware of the risks associated with the work they perform. They blindly perform safety-sensitive tasks, and either unknowingly avert an incident, or actually suffer the consequences.

This can often affect newly hired employees, workers in a new industry, those whose role has changed, those using new equipment, or the under-supervised.

