g. President Taylor announced that the Faculty Senate Scholarship updates were mentioned in the Treasurer report and did not need to be brought up again.

h. President Taylor brought up an issue from the SUUSA Vice President about surveying students on students who are not meeting grades and may fail and the need for advice on this issue. It was suggested that maybe SUU needs a way to report this on a quarterly basis or have a stronger way in capturing this data in order to catch these students before they are in trouble grade wise. Multiple faculty brought up that SANS is already in place and should be doing this; however, the SANS people are often mentioning they are trying to contact these students but cannot. It was suggested many faculty are utilizing Canvas in their courses, however, some do not use Canvas in their courses due to the nature of the course, so this may not work either. With this being said it was noted that Mid Term grades could be input in Canvas by all even if they do not use Canvas in their course for reporting purposes and help catch the at-risk students early before they fail their course. President Julie Taylor took responsibility for passing this information on.

i. Steve Barney presented the flexible faculty workload policy ideas and how this policy could look. The purpose is to help give faculty reasonable workloads since each college and department is different across campus thus relieving extra workload off the faculty who are working harder and taking on more to meet not only teaching standards but also a lot of extra work. The point was brought up that more and more expectations have been placed on faculty without much give and thus overwhelming many faculty. Steve Barney is chair to this committee. Also, faculty petitioned from each college and serving on the committee is Todd Peterson, John Taylor, Scott Lanning, Bart Reynolds, and Grant Corser. This committee reviewed other models from the CoPlac schools, Carnegie Schools, and the schools in Utah. The models presented were the Track Model, Departmental Prerogative (most popular model), Substitution Models, Scholarly reductions for publication (also a popular model), and Reassignment for specialized course content. Julie Taylor mentioned that she would put the information sheet with these models up on Canvas for the faculty to review. Steve Barney asked the senate what they would like to see. The question was posed “We are the teaching school with accreditation standards so to be independent on the financial side may this be in vain?” and “How do some of these models apply to schools at the University who have
It was then stated that maybe the Departmental prerogative model may be the way to go then. It was also mentioned that the Track Model or hybrid mix may also work. It was also mentioned that the Flexible Faculty Workload model will help with issues such as inequality in workloads among faculty. Lee Montgomery moved in the interest of expediency to limit discussion to one more comment and Mark DeBeliso seconded the motion with the question to President Wyatt if he thought if some form of a flexible workload policy would be possible. President Wyatt stated he is too new to properly answer the question. President Taylor encouraged Steve to continue and that senators bring this back to their faculty for ideas and support.

j. Christine Frezza gave an update from the Benefits Committee. The committee is focusing on benefits through new vendors that meet new requirements. The question is “will this increase costs?” The answer was a simple yes, but they are trying to keep costs down. They are trying to make sure the access and providers are in the local network/providers, meaning Cedar City and St. George. The decision should be made by February.

k. Michelle Orihel updated the faculty senate on the GE committee. The GE mission was revised. Michelle talked about one of the objects being Sets which help registration be more streamlined and setting the students up in courses that focus on their interests. The question about TRIOs and when implementation would happen. The answer was “next fall there will be a pilot program.” The professors would come up with the sets and fostering learning communities and ultimately improve grades and retention of first year students. Essential learning outcomes are also being looked at and the committee has set up rubrics of how these ELOs would look.

l. President Julie Tayler mentioned the need for recruits to work with the staff association on the parking issue. Steve Irving and Isabella Borisova volunteered to work on the faculty parking.
