Art Insights with Dallas Graham, Making a Difference with Art

Written by Amanda DeBry

Southern Utah University, Cedar City, Utah: On Thursday November 1, 2018, at 7:00 p.m. in the SUU Auditorium, SUU's College of Performing and Visual Arts and the Department of Art and Design are excited to welcome artist Dallas Graham to present on his artwork. This event is free and open to the public.

Meri Page, Assistant Professor of Graphic Design at SUU said "Dallas Graham's Red Fred Project beautifully illustrates how graphic design can not only be used for the greater good, but can change lives. Giving a vehicle and a voice to children who are living in extraordinary circumstances the books that are created through this collaboration become a lasting tribute to each child's unique vision and perspective."

Dallas Graham is a publisher and the executive director of the Red Fred Project, a non-profit organization publishing books about children living in extraordinary circumstances (rare diseases and critical illnesses). Dallas is a photojournalist, graphic designer, and writer and enjoys discovering creative ways of connecting people through their stories. He has produced a number of personal and community driven projects and can't seem to turn off his "idea" switch. The Red Fred Project is a culmination of four of his favorite things: stories, hope, children, and you.

Graham said, "I'm excited to be returning to the quality halls and lawns and brains and student body of SUU! My visit earlier this year was a wonderful exploration between disciplines, proving a creative relevance and interest among the students with the work I do."

Enjoy this presentation from Dallas Graham about his wonderful work for one night only, on November 1st. For more information, please visit www.suu.edu/pva.
